THE HUMOROUS SIDE OF THE MURPHY-SUMMERS GO IN PHILADELPHIA

ONE OF THOSE BUGS FROM HARLEM. MR. SUMMERS STARTED LIKE THE REAL FIREWORKS. TOMMY'S INFIGHTING. DU'IME, NOW I KNOW WHAT THE LOGGIN STARS MEAN. MR. WICKS PICKED UP A LITTLE PHILLIE CORNER WORK. SUMMERS KNOWS ALL ABOUT IT NOW.

SUMMERS WINS FIERCE FIGHT WITH MURPHY

By Robert Edgren. (Special to The Evening World.) PHILADELPHIA, May 23.—In a furious fight that was full of thrills, replete in savage attacks, sudden reversals, hairbreadth escapes...

Summers took the aggressive as soon as the bell rang. He jumped at Murphy and jabbed him on the nose with a straight left. They came into a mix-up. And right here the fight fans had a sudden surprise. Summers beat Murphy at his own game. Fighting straight Queensberry rules, mixing at close quarters, he had all the best of it. Summers was much stronger than Murphy. He was equally skillful. He was aggressive as a little bulldog. Murphy hooked the Briton on the jaw viciously. Summers, with a sudden rush, carried Tommy to the ropes. All down one side of the ring they fought. Summers flying his left. Summers' left chipped at Tommy on the chin. Instantly the right hooked over in a short, snappy arc. It landed with a thud. Under the white arc lights I saw the face of Murphy, suddenly become pasty and expressionless as he half turned and dropped heavily to his haunches. I looked like a clean knockout.

Tommy, with both hands on the floor, tried to push himself up. The referee rushed in to hold Summers away. The Englishman, with cool deliberation, stepped far back and waited. Murphy's face still staid, moved spasmodically, gathering his legs under him for the attempt. Then he rose slowly to his feet and stood for an instant as if half dazed. Murphy turned toward Summers and gave a half lurch forward. Summers stepped in deliberately. His right fist chugged again on Tommy's jaw, and down went the latter boy once more, to lie in a crumpled heap. The referee began to count. Tommy, his face drawn and white, suddenly looking old, reached for the ropes, missed, sprawled for a second, then came slowly up to face his rival, who was calmly waiting. It was a game exhibition, and the crowd that had been yelling madly for Summers in the first shock of his surprise, stopped and waited for what was to come. Summers stood off and let Tommy find his balance. Murphy was in and trembling, giving weakly at the knees. Summers stepped back a pace as if to give Murphy more time. But the latter, who was not to have it that way, the expression on his face reminded me of that fatal night when Terry McGovern dropped him for a sudden finish. Murphy looked backward. His light-blue eyes were popped out as if in fear. His mouth dropped open. He looked like a boy who had been smacked on the back of the head. The mixing was on again. Murphy covered his jaw with both hands and doubled until his stomach was drawn back out of range. Summers hammered at him. Murphy, gradually straightening, shot back a few hooks. But he was not to have it that way. Tommy jabbed a full foot short, it swung and missed by a yard. Then he began to recover slowly. Summers threw a right straight over to Tommy's jaw, and Murphy clinched and held. He tried his famous infighting. But he was not to have it that way. Summers, cool and patient, forced Tommy back along the ropes, punched him along from post to post. In a final flurry the bell rang. But such was the deafening roar arising from the ringside that neither fighters nor referee could hear it. The timer
